Dear Andrew,

Thank you for your recent Written Question asking how the Welsh Government is working to improve the availability of full blood count tests for people presenting with symptoms indicative of leukaemia.

The Welsh Government expects GPs to investigate suspected blood cancer in line with appropriate local and national guidelines. This is a routine investigation delivered as part of General Medical Services. Where necessary, practices should have the capability to undertake urgent blood tests as part of a patient's pathway of care.

Yours sincerely,

Eluned Morgan AS/MS
